

PLAYGROUND ELEGY

Clint Smith

The first time I slid down a slide my mother told me to hold my hands towards the sky.

Something about gravity, weight distribution, & feeling the air ripple through your fingers.

I remember reaching the bottom, smile consuming half of my face, hands still in the air because I didn't want it to stop. Ever since, this defiance of gravity has always been synonymous with feeling alive.

When I read of the new child, his body strewn across the street, a casket of bones & concrete, I wonder how many times he slid down the slide. How many times he defied gravity to answer a question in class. Did he raise his hands for all of them? Does my mother regret this? That she raised a black boy growing up to think that raised hands made me feel more alive. That raised hands meant I was alive. That raised hands meant I would live.

SOURCE: Smith, C. (n.d.). Playground elegy. Retrieved from <http://www.stilljournal.net/clint-smith-poetry.php>