Essential Question

How did the debate of ideas between the Federalists and Anti-Federalists influence the ratification of the U.S. Constitution?

Summary

Students will listen to the lyrics from Hamilton to consider why the US Constitution needed to be defended. In collaborative groups, students will work to understand and create point-of-view statements for both Federalists' and Anti-Federalists' viewpoints on ratifying the U.S. Constitution. Next, students will discuss how these debates influenced government structure and policy in the United States throughout the nation's history. Finally, students reflect on what they have learned in this lesson to answer the essential question using the exit ticket strategy.

Snapshot

Engage

Students listen to the song "Non-Stop" from the musical Hamilton and consider why Hamilton would describe the U.S. Constitution as his "client" in need of defending.

Explore

Working in collaborative groups, students read the "Debate Over Ratification" article. Each group creates 3–5 statements from the Federalist and Anti-Federalist points of view regarding ratification of the Constitution.

Explain

Using a Card Sort strategy, student groups sort a series of statements into "Federalist" and "Anti-Federalist" categories, examining the evidence each statement gives for supporting or opposing ratification of the Constitution.

Extend

Students create social media posts to represent Federalist and Anti-Federalist views on ratifying the Constitution. Then, the class discusses how the Federalist and Anti-Federalist debate over ratification shaped the structure of the Constitution.

Evaluate

The class discusses major issues currently debated on social media or in other public forums. Students consider how these debates influence government structure and policy today. Lastly, students reflect on their learning by completing an exit ticket in response to the essential question of this lesson.

Teacher's Note: Lesson Preparation

Prior to the lesson, prepare the attached Federalist/Anti-Federalist Card Sort activity. Print on heavy paper or card stock and cut out a 10-card set for each group of 3–4 students. Place each set in individual plastic bags or envelopes, if possible.

Use the attached Lesson Slides to guide the lesson. Begin by introducing students to the essential question on slide 3, "How did the debate of ideas between the Federalists and Anti-Federalists influence the ratification of the United States Constitution?" Advance to slide 4 and review the learning objectives of this lesson.

Next, display slide 5 and pass out a copy of the attached "Non-Stop" Lyrics from the musical "Hamilton" to each student. Explain to students that the lyric sheet contains only a short portion of the song. Ask students to consider the question on the slide that is also printed at the bottom of the lyric sheet:

"Why does Alexander Hamilton describe the U.S. Constitution as his 'client' that needs defending?"

Ask students to underline statements or phrases that might answer the question as they listen. Direct students to their lyric sheet when that part of the song is playing. Display slide 6 and play the song Non-Stop by clicking on the embedded video.

When the song is over, move to slide 7 and give students 1–2 minutes to discuss the question using the Elbow Partner strategy. Ask students to share their responses. Based on those responses, facilitate a short class discussion and connect students' prior knowledge of the Constitutional Convention to the debate over ratification of the Constitution.

Sample Class Discussion Responses

The structure of the Constitution was heavily debated during the Constitutional Convention (for example, the debate over representation, powers to the national government, slavery, etc.) so it is not surprising that, once the Constitution was published, there were people who supported ratifying the Constitution and people who opposed it. Hamilton was a lawyer, so his language was largely persuasive and included terms like "defense" and "client." Hamilton recognized the need to explain and defend the Constitution to the public in order to garner enough support to ratify it. He would go on to write essays with John Jay and James Madison defending the Constitution and persuading people to support ratifying it. Those essays became known as The Federalist Papers.

20 minutes

Explore

Moving to slide 8, transition by explaining to the class that, once the Constitution was made public, two major groups developed: the Federalists and the Anti-Federalists. These groups influenced the public debate over whether or not the Constitution should be ratified, and as a result, helped to determine the ultimate structure of our current government.

Now, sort the class into groups of three to four students. Hand out the attached Debate Over Ratification article to all students. Moving to slide 9, ask students to work collaboratively with their group to explore different viewpoints of Federalists and Anti-Federalists as they read. Have students use a modified form of the Categorical Highlighting strategy in which they underline Federalist viewpoints and circle Anti-Federalist viewpoints.

After the class has finished reading, move to slide 10. Ask each group to reference the information they marked to create one point-of-view statement, or summary statement, for the Federalist viewpoint and one for the Anti-Federalist viewpoint. Each of these statements should be three to five sentences in length, written on a sheet of notebook paper with all group names listed.

Teacher's Note: Scaffolding Statement Structure

As students begin writing their point-of-view statements, remind them to state in their opening sentence whether or not each group supported or opposed ratification. Then, in their remaining sentences, they can explain why each group held that viewpoint.

Call on each group to share their point-of-view statements. As others read, have students correct any misinformation they might have in their own statements.

Sample Student Response for Federalists

Federalists supported ratification of the Constitution as it was written. They felt the Constitution did enough to limit the power of the government with federalism, separation of powers, and checks and balances. Therefore, the Constitution was ready to be ratified.

Sample Student Response for Anti-Federalists

Anti-Federalists opposed ratification of the Constitution. They felt the Constitution gave too much power to the national government. To further limit the power of the national government, they felt a Bill of Rights was needed to better protect the rights of individual citizens.

15 minutes

Explain

Move to slide 11. Have students use the Card Sort strategy and pass out the attached Federalist/Anti-Federalist Card Sort to each group. Ask students to work together and apply their knowledge of Federalist and Anti-Federalist perspectives on ratification to complete the activity. Each card contains a statement made by Federalists or Anti-Federalists, for or against ratification. Ask students to sort the cards into "Federalist" or "Anti-Federalist" viewpoint categories based on what they know. After all groups have finished the activity, call on each group to explain why a given statement supports the Federalist or Anti-Federalist point of view.

Technology: Alternative Digital Card Sort with Desmos

If you would prefer a digital card sort, use the following Desmos Classroom activity. Select the following link: "Federalist/Anti-Federalist Card Sort." Create an account or sign in under the "Activity Sessions" heading. After you log in, the green "Assign" dropdown button will be active. Click the arrow next to the word "Assign;" then select "Single Session Code." After making some setting selections, select "Create Invitation Code" and give the session code to students.

Students do not have to sign in unless they intend to pause and resume the activity at a later time.

If using the digital card sort, provide students with your session code. Then, have students go to student.amplify.com/join and enter the session code.

Possible Student Responses

Please see the attached Federalist/Anti-Federalist Card Sort for Teachers for the correct responses to the Card Sort.

Alternatively, use the teacher dashboard in Desmos to check student responses for accuracy.

Teacher's Note: Managing Group Discussion

When calling on groups to explain their answers, consider assigning each group one or two statements to explain to the class why the group categorized them as "Federalist" or "Anti-Federalist." If pressed for time, limit class discussion to only the statements deemed most important or relevant.

20 minutes

Extend

Move to slide 12 and give each group a copy of the attached Social Media Debate: Alexander Hamilton and George Mason handout. Ask students to read the mock Social Media exchange between Alexander Hamilton (representing the Federalist side) and George Mason (representing the Anti-Federalist side) as they debate over ratifying the Constitution.

Either in groups or individually, have students use attached Social Media Post handout to create one new post for Alexander Hamilton and one for George Mason that accurately represent each view on ratifying the Constitution.

Once students have created their social media posts, ask two students from each group to represent the two opposing viewpoints. Have students who represent the Federalist viewpoint line up on one side of the room and students who represent the Anti-Federalist viewpoint line up on the opposite side. Ask students to share aloud their posts one at a time, alternating viewpoints to mimic a debate—first a Federalist post, then an Anti-Federalist post.

After sharing their posts, move to slide 13. Have students discuss the following question:

“How did the Federalist vs. Anti-Federalist debate over ratification impact the structure and function of our government today?”

Give each group 2–3 minutes to discuss how the arguments of both Federalists and Anti-Federalists influenced the structure and functioning of our government. Then call on different groups to share answers with the class. Move to slide 14 for more examples that may be discussed as a class if they have not already been mentioned.

Possible Student Responses

Students might point out that our government is structured with federalism, separation of powers, and checks and balances—all structures explained and supported by the Federalists. Students might point out the importance of these structures in limiting the power of the national government and ensuring that our state governments and individuals have power as well. Additionally, students might note that we have a Bill of Rights today because of the arguments put forth by the Anti-Federalists. Students might also point to specific freedoms listed in the Bill of Rights that they feel are important to them as citizens, such as freedom of speech and freedom of the press.

10 minutes

Evaluate

Move to slide 15 and ask the class to brainstorm issues debated on social media or in other public forums today, similar to the way ratification of the Constitution was debated in the late 1700s. With the class, make a list of these current issues by writing the responses on the board. Discuss how each issue influences or is influenced by government structure and policy and, by extension, our daily lives.

Possible Student Responses

Responses may include issues involving national government and state government policies, for example, ICE vs. sanctuary cities. Another example might be when the State of Oklahoma wanted to put a monument of the Ten Commandments on the grounds of the Capitol building. Many who protested this cited the separation of church and state in the Constitution's Bill of Rights. Other issues may include immigration, gun regulations, environmental regulations, health care, education, etc.

Proceed to Slide 16. Have each student complete an Exit Ticket at the end of class on a sticky note or a piece of paper that asks them to write an answer to the lesson's essential question.

How did the debate of ideas between the Federalists and Anti-Federalists influence the ratification of the U.S. Constitution?

Teacher's Note: Evaluations

Evaluations for this lesson may include the point-of-view summaries completed by each group in the Explore portion of the lesson, Social Media posts completed by each group or individual student in the Extend portion, and the exit ticket that students complete during the evaluate section.
