The Emancipation Proclamation did:	The Emancipation Proclamation did not:
Expand the goals of the war, making freedom for enslaved people a legitimate aim	End racism in America
Free enslaved people in states who were rebelling against the U.S. government during the Civil War	Make all people in the United States equal with the same rights and freedoms
Allow black men to join the Union army, paving the way for black Americans to fight for their own freedom	Abolish slavery in the United States, freeing all enslaved people
Lead the way to abolishing slavery in the United States as a first step towards freeing all slaves in the North and the South	Create an experience of immediate freedom for all enslaved people in the Confederacy
Threaten the institution of slavery	Make Lincoln the only person to take action to free enslaved people
