

SAY IT RIGHT, GET IT RIGHT SCENARIOS

1

You're about to start a new unit on literary analysis. Your students have a wide range of reading abilities and engagement levels. You need help creating an engaging activity that introduces literary themes in a way that resonates with all learners.

2

You've noticed students are struggling with applying math concepts to real-world situations. You want to build a short activity that helps Algebra 1 students see the relevance of linear equations in everyday life.

3

Your upcoming unit covers ecosystems, and you want to include a hands-on or virtual lab that emphasizes interdependence. You're short on prep time and need something creative, yet manageable with your current resources.

4

You want to deepen your students' understanding of a major historical event, such as the Civil Rights Movement. You want students to connect emotionally and intellectually, perhaps by analyzing personal narratives or lesser-known perspectives.

5

You're planning to introduce group work as a regular routine in your classroom. You want to establish clear expectations and procedures to help things run smoothly. You're looking for support to proactively address common group work challenges.
