

STATEMENT CARDS

College pennants, banners, and posters are visible in most classrooms, halls, and common areas.	Information about career pathways is visible and part of everyday discussions.
Teachers include visual cues to encourage discussions about their college experience with their students. (Examples include posting information about their alma mater or hanging copies of their college degree.)	College and career success stories are prevalent throughout the school.
Family college planning events occur at least twice per year, outside of regular school hours.	Students visit career technical centers, community colleges, and/or universities for educational field trips.
Lessons include real-life connections to career pathways and postsecondary options.	College and career readiness activities are integrated into regular coursework. (For example, students take career interest surveys, learn to write scholarship application essays during English class, or compute the cost of postsecondary options in math class.)

Your school sponsors or provides professional development on the topics of college and career readiness and success.

Educators, administrators, and staff members encourage, counsel, and emphasize the importance of pursuing education and training beyond high school to all students.

All students are encouraged to challenge themselves academically and take rigorous coursework

Teachers believe that all students can succeed in higher-level academic classes when the appropriate strategies and support structures are put in place.
